INDUSTRY

The credit cards market grew between 2002 and 2006 at an annualized rate of 40 per cent (Cards in force). The growth was driven by the fundamental changes in the Indian demographic profile. This included aspects such as income, age and consumption behavior. There was also an expansion in the consumer markets, more product segments being financed and an increase in the penetration rates of credit.

The major drivers for the growth in the credit card industry have been:

- Changing mindset of Indian consumers, from being averse to credit to being more than willing to avail of credit
- Increasing aspiration levels of the Indian middle class
- Increasing household income, enabling consumers to become eligible for multiple loans
- Increased geographical presence of financiers
- Increasing working population and mostly youngsters.

However since 2006, the industry has gone through a low and then a consolidation phase. Due to the highly competitive market and the absence of a reliable credit bureau, in 2007 and 2008, the industry saw rising delinquencies during which 30 days past due delinquency rose from 10% in December 2007 to 14% in December 2008, peaking at 18% in May 2009.

In 2009, most players in the industry made two significant changes:

- 1) Augmenting the collection infrastructure
- 2) Tighten credit underwriting policies

The result of this was that the industry was able to bring down the delinquency levels to 10.6% by June of 2010. However at the same time, the industry also culled significant portions of the card base, eliminating inactive or high risk cards in an effort to control operating expenses and future credit losses. They also withdrew from a lot of 2nd and 3rd Tier cities to consolidate their infrastructure cost.

Through 2011, the industry has slowly started going back into growth phase. Players are gradually ramping up their sales budgets to capture a resurgent credit card market.

Going forward, the credit card market will continue to grow. The establishment of more credit bureaus is expected to lower delinquencies and ensure higher availability of cards to the middle-income salaried segment. The increasing base of card-accepting merchant establishments and rising spends are expected to be key trends for the credit card industry over the medium term.

The credit cards expenditure as a percentage of total consumer expenditure is low at 3% in India against a global average of 9% and Asia- Pacific average of 6% signifying a large opportunity in the future.

The key success factors to grow in the credit cards markets include, besides lower cost of funds:

- Good risk assessment procedures;
- Right technology and channels of delivery, in order to target & service customers better; and
- Good distribution network & alliances and relationship management with major brands.
